

Keeping Vigil – An Advent Reflection

The glory of the Lord will shine on you
Like the sun he will rise over you
God's glory will appear in your midst
The prophet Isaiah

To keep vigil means to wait and watch. When we keep vigil we gather our scattered energies and we become present in watchful attention. Silence and prayer are the marks of a vigil, as are candles. The light symbolises hope and promise. In our church year we are about to enter this time of waiting and watching.

Next week is the first week of the season of Advent – the four weeks leading to Christmas. There is something absolutely beautiful and utterly profound about Advent: words and images of light, hope, promise, waiting and longing, such as those of Isaiah, above. There is gentleness, beauty and tenderness in the images and music of Advent. It really is a holy season when everything – the liturgy, Scripture – all speak of a reality both beyond and within what is known, a reality that will break upon us like the coming of dawn, as Zechariah says in his beautiful prayer in Luke's Gospel.

Everything points towards the coming of the One whose story we know will touch us. But we are not there yet. We prepare our hearts and minds. There is the anticipation of the feast to come. The readings we hear during these weeks are all dripping with these rich images. The beautiful words of promise from the Hebrew prophet Isaiah, speak of the abundance of life, peace, richness and joy:

*Let the wilderness and the dry lands exult;
Let the wasteland rejoice and bloom;
Let it bring forth flowers like the jonquil;
Let it rejoice and sing for joy.
Strengthen all weary hands,
Steady all trembling knees and say to all faint hearts,
Courage, do not be afraid
Look, your God is coming.*

There is something about Advent which turns our gaze 'upwards' and outwards, into a context greater than we are and in which we find ourselves. We are invited into a real sense of the glory and mystery of the universe we live in. It is a time to ponder and treasure. The prayer of the Church at this time too is filled with this:

*Lord, our God, Your glory breaks on the world.
We are filled with the new light
by the coming of your Word among us.
Lord, make us turn to you.
Let us see your face and we shall be renewed.
Open our hearts to receive this life.
Increase our vision with the rising of dawn that our lives may be filled with his glory and peace.
Make us a people of this light.
Make us faithful to your Word that we may bring your life to the waiting world.
(From the Liturgy of the Hours)*

Advent also brings us closer to the end of our secular year and here in Australia it marks the ending of the school year too, so on many levels there is that invitation to slow down and change focus. But while Advent comes at the end of our secular and academic year, it marks the beginning of the new church year. The church year ends with the Solemnity of Christ the King, which we celebrated last Sunday, and it begins again with the first Sunday of Advent. There is something really beautiful and deeply revelatory in these two important markers in the church year. Both of these, the Feast of Christ the King and Advent, have much to say to us about the reality of our universe, viewed through religious eyes.

At first glance, the Feast of Christ the King may seem a strange one in this day and age. This is a fairly new feast in the liturgical year – it was initiated by Pope Pius XI in 1925. He did this in response to the growing nationalism and secularism of that time and he named it,

Our Lord Jesus Christ the King. It was celebrated at the end of October, just before the Feast of all Souls. In 1969 Pope Paul VI renamed it, Our Lord Jesus Christ King of the Universe, and changed the date to what we have now, the last Sunday of the church year.

In our twenty-first century world, the word ‘king’ may not sit too well with us, and the notion of kingship does not inspire the same sense of awe and reverence it once did. But we know too that Jesus as ‘king’ turns the notion of kingship upside down anyway. Jesus’ kingly rule is understood to be one of servant leadership. Just a few days before his crucifixion, he was acclaimed in kingly style while riding into Jerusalem on a donkey, and this was seen as the fulfillment of the prophecy, “See your king comes to you, gentle and riding on a donkey” (Zechariah 9:9).

There is also a strong element of suffering in this kingship of Jesus and mockery by those who named him as such. The Roman soldiers torturing Jesus bowed down to him in mock homage and dressed him in kingly purple. Pilate, in his exchange with Jesus, questioned him: “So you are a king”? (John 18:33 – 38) and when he was crucified the words, ‘King of the Jews’, were placed above his head on the cross. But the Christian understanding of Jesus’ kingship, his greatness, is most authentically expressed in his humility and service and utter self-giving to God.

So we have this feast proclaiming Jesus King of the universe, and we have our season of waiting, followed by the great Feast of Christmas. When we depth these two significant moments in our liturgical year we see there is something very powerful and profound revealed to us about our universe. In Advent we have a rich liturgical tradition to inspire us and in which to immerse ourselves. One of the traditions of this time is the singing or reciting of the ‘Great O Antiphons’ on the last seven days before Christmas. These antiphons are part of Vespers, the evening prayer of the Church (the Liturgy of the Hours). Each antiphon is a name of Christ and an attribute of Christ which are found in Scripture:

O Wisdom, O Lord, O Root of Jesse, O Key of David, O Dayspring, O King of the nations, O Emmanuel. These names and attributes cover a magnificent sweep of our religious story and understanding of Jesus: from the Hebrew Wisdom tradition of naming God's activity in the world as Wisdom and identifying Jesus as that Wisdom, to the genealogy of Jesus, placing him firmly in the line of the great Hebrew king, David. And then there is the highly symbolic and poetic Dayspring or the Rising Sun, and the clear naming of him as Emmanuel, God-with-us. The Jewish Tradition refers to God as 'Lord', and when this name is given to Jesus it is a powerful statement of who he is.

Reflecting on these names invites us to see Jesus not only as the man who lived two thousand years ago in a particular place and time, but most profoundly, they offer us a vision of who he is – the Christ. The Franciscan spiritual writer, Richard Rohr, says: Much of Christianity has made Jesus Christ into a denominational savior figure while others have looked upon his saving grace as limited to a few who meet strict qualifications. But what about creation as a whole? How far back and forward in time does the Christ figure extend, and who exactly is Christ?

Well, we only have to look into our Christian Scriptures to answer this question. When we do, we find a marvellous understanding. In the Prologue of John's Gospel, we read: In the beginning was the Word and the Word was with God and the Word was God. He was in the beginning with God. All things came into being through him and without him not one thing came into being ... and the Word became flesh and lived among us (John 1:1 – 3 and 14). Christian Scripture makes Jesus' place in the history of the universe counted in billions of years and beyond. In Paul's letters to the Colossians and Ephesians, in what are known as the Pauline hymns, we find this too: He is the image of the invisible God – all things have been created through him and for him ... He himself is before all things (Colossians 1: 15 – 17). And John, in his first letter, talks about the eternal life that was with the Father and was revealed to us in Jesus (1John 1: 1- 2).

Our cosmos is unimaginably vast and ancient and, mindful of this, reading these Scripture texts is really exciting! The Jesus whose birth we prepare for during Advent and celebrate at Christmas, the Jesus whose life we participate in and are redeemed by, is the eternal Christ.

Well, what does that say to us about our world? Rohr says: The real trump card of Christianity is not just that we believe in God. The mystery we are about is much more than that: it's that the material and the spiritual coexist. It's the mystery of the Incarnation. It is the understanding that the great eternal God became human at a point in history and in a place in the world, but it is also the understanding that the entire material universe is an expression of this great God. And as Christians, we believe it is the Jesus story that reveals this. Long ago God spoke to our ancestors in many and various ways by the prophets, but in these last days God has spoken to us by a son, whom he appointed heir of all things, through whom he also created the worlds. He is the reflection of God's glory and the exact imprint of God's very being. And he sustains all things by his powerful word (Hebrews 1: 1 - 3).

Dante Alighieri opens the 'Paradiso' segment of his Divine Comedy by proclaiming that God is a glorious light that sends itself out into the universe and is received and reflected by all beings in accordance with their dignity: The glory of the One who moves all things penetrates the universe and reverberates more in one part and less in another. What Dante is saying too is that all of creation is a re-glowing of God that emanates from the very core of its being. And this is what Advent invites us to see. It is also what is proclaimed in naming Christ, Universal King. It is a consciousness that changes the very way we look at reality. In Christian terms we speak of this reality as the 'Cosmic Christ'.

So Advent and Christmas, and the Feast of Christ the Universal King, speak to us of both the historical Jesus and the Cosmic Christ. We begin our journey through our Church year bringing into our awareness this marvelous understanding of our world, seeing it most powerfully embodied or enfleshed in time – incarnated – in Jesus of Nazareth. And we end our Church year with this same awareness – by celebrating Christ, Universal King, Lord of all.

So let us enter this Advent vigil and embrace it with joy. We wait with the longing and watchfulness of the Jewish people who longed for the coming of the Messiah. We wait in hope, and we watch and long for the peace, joy, justice and light that the Messiah brings into our world and into our hearts. As we wait, we look for signs of God's Presence in our world and in ourselves. Whenever we see goodness, love, justice, good-will, peace, we see God's Presence. Whenever we overcome our own self-interest and reach out in love, we see signs of God's Presence. Advent is a comforting, hope-filled and yet challenging time too. The promise is: All shall be well. The Light shines in spite of the darkness. Whatever the darkness of our need or pain or sadness might be, Advent reminds us that we are not alone, we are not left in darkness. As the prophet Isaiah said so long ago, The glory of the Lord will shine on you, Like the sun he will rise over you, God's glory will appear in your midst. This 'glory of the Lord' may be in a gentle assurance, in hope, in peace and comfort in spite of pain, in forgiveness or reconciliation, in kindness and generosity, and in countless ways that we are healed and held.

Advent is not a time to be hurried. A truly spiritual and religious perspective on life will always be mindful of 'the fullness of time', a time that is not of our own making. While retailers frantically engage in a countdown, reminding us of how many shopping days are left before Christmas and urging haste in the buying and spending, Advent's invitation is to another pace, the pace of grace, the pace of God's time. We are invited to enter this and to watch and wait, to keep vigil over our hearts.

During these weeks, try to take some time each day for yourself, find a quiet place, still your body and mind, and simply watch and wait. Light an Advent candle and remember the promise that marks this holy time: the light shines in the darkness and the darkness did not overcome it.

May the peace and joy of our Lord and of this holy time enfold you and fill you.

The Lord, your God is in your midst; he will rejoice over you with gladness, he will renew you in his love; he will exult over you with loud singing, as on a day of festival.

(Zepaniah 3:17)
